The Pan Am jumbo eventually came down safely at Beirut, Lebanon, although airport of-ficials at first tried to divert it elsewhere, saying the runways were not long enough for a Boeing-747.

Late tonight the aircraft was being refueled and apparently it would be permitted to take off for Cairo, at the demand of the four Arab hijackers reported aboard. No passengers were re-

For most of the day and night there was uncertainty where the TWA and Swissair planes had landed. But late tonight Swissair said its DC-8 had landed safely at an airport at Zerqa, Jordan, about 15 miles northeast of Amman, And Amman television said that the TWA plane also was there,

As hijacking piled on hijacking, European airport security guards tightened security.

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP), a Marxist leaning guerrilla-group, claimed credit for all-four hijackings, although some spokesmen earlier in the day had denied involvement in the seizure of the Pan Am jumbo.

The Swissair jet and its pas-sengers reportedly will be held hostage for the return of three PFLP guerrillas held in Switz-

There also were guerrilla hints tonight that they would seek the release by Britain of the woman hijacker captured in the attempt to seize the El Al airliner.

"It is now up to the British government to consider seriously its behavior toward the Popular Front heroes who are now being held in London," a PFLP statement said. Witnesses gave this description of the attempt to hijack the El Al jet:

Arab League Makes Appeal

CAIRO, Sept. 6 (Reuters) .-The Arah League council, called into emergency session to discuss the situation in Amman, appealed today to the Jordan thorities and the Palestinian commandos to cease armed clashes immediately.

The decision was announced after a final session of the 14member council, which met here last night after a week of clashes reported to have caused some 200 casualties in Amman.

The council also decided to reactivate—this time under Arab Teague auspices-a fournation committee that helped resolve similar Jordanian-commando clashes last June.

The urgent session of the council was requested by the Palestine Liberation Organization, whose representatives took part in the discussions here and joined with Jordanian and Arab League representatives in a committee that drafted the final resolutions.

The four-nation mediation committee from Egypt, Libys, Sudan and Algeria was first set up by a summit of "frontcountries in Tripoli June

An Arab League statement said the four-nation committee would now be joined by a League representative and that it would start its work as of today. Its brief would be to study practical measures to resolve the Jordanian-Palestinlan differences and it would work in close touch with the League's secretarist.

Then passengers jumped the girl. They pounded her with their fists. They pulled at her. A passenger reportedly held the girl's arms to try to keep her from arming the grenades.

By sheer weight and numbers, the enraged passengers bore the girl down, sat on her and bound her arms and legs with neckties. It was later reported the woman hijacker suffered several broken ribs.

The steward blood streaming down his head, reportedly from a head wound, staggered down the aisle. He was identified as Shlomo Vider and, according to some reports, actually was a security agent, working as a steward.

The male hijacker slumped to the floor, fatally wounded. The pilot, by sharp banks of the jet, had sought to throw the hijackers off balance, perhaps a routine worked out by El Al security. El Al jets reportedly carry two armed guards on all flights.

The thing that concerns me, Mr. Nix said recently, "is the retention of good school administrators throughout out state. That is the real problem." The superintendents who resign

So intense was that pressure for one superintendent in Mississippi that, last year, he chose to end his career, not hy resigning but by suicide.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6 (AP).—

Sen. Birch Bayh, D., Ind., said yesterday that there now were 65 to 60 solid Senate votes for a constitutional amendment providing for the election of the President by direct popular vote.

Although this is short of the required two-thirds majority, Sen. Bayh said that there was a possibility of getting the votes of as many as 75 of the 100 senators. The proposed amendment, approved by the House a year ago by a 339-70 vote, will be the first order of business when the Senate returns on Tuesday from its Labor Day recess.

Mt. Athos Monastic Republic Bars Hippies as Well as Girls

ATHENS, Sept. 8 (AP) .- The monks of Mount Athos, the allmala Byzantine monastic republic in northern Greece, have decreed that hippies are no longer welcome in their community. The abbot of the 121-square-mile autonomous theocracy on the Khalkidhiki Peninsula says that all persons with long hair or of unkempt appearance have been barred from the 1,000-year-old state—where according to tradition, no female, human or animal has ever set foot.

A circular handed out to visitors and pilgrims entering Mount Athos says: "The sacred history of the mountain, the hastion of Christian orthodoxy, requires of every visitor adequate, becoming and dignified demeanor. Visitors should be appropriately restrained both in their clothing as well as hair. Otherwise we shall be obliged to refuse entrance to those who don't comply."

The circular is printed in Greek, English, French and German. Several Have Tried

-Through the centuries, several women, mostly foreign, have tried to penetrate Mount Athos usually disguised as men, but they have been promptly discovered and evicted by the monks before reaching the interior of the bastion. . At the height of its power in the Middle Ages, Mount Athos was occupied by as many as 20,000 monks and hermits. Only about 1,500 remain today and their number is dwindling.

Famous for its Byzantine monasteries and relics, Mount Athon was founded as a monastic community in 963 and became a theocratic republic under Greek suzerainty in 1920.

Makarova in Hiding: Troupe Quits London

LONDON, Sept. 6 (Reuters) — ussia's Kirov Ballet Company flew ut of Britain today, refusing to alk about Natalia Makarova, the allering who has received asylum n Britain.

She slipped away from the rest of the company on Friday and suc-essfully applied for permission to tay in Britain. When the Soviet imbassy asked to see her,

One of Miss Makarova's close riends was quoted today as saying he had been deeply impressed by he way she was treated here since urriving with the Kirov company

The report said she had developed a taste for the material posessions and acclaim which she aw were showered on prims balcrinas in the West.

As one of the Kirov's top dencers Miss Makarova would seem to be assured of a brilliant career in Britain—like the Russian male dancer Rudolf Nureyev, who left the same company nine years ago

When she sought permission to live in Britain, Miss Makarova was reported to have told the Home Office she had no political motives but thought it would be good for

As the rest of the Kirov company flew to the Netherlands for dancing engagements in eight cities, Miss Makerova remained in hiding with friends.

The company's press spokesman said at Heathrow Airport; "The group have enjoyed themselves and London very much. They hope to return to Britain soon." The spokesman refused to say anything about Miss Makarova.

Yesterday, her agent here said Miss Makarova wanted to stay in Britain for personal and emotional reasons, not for political or professional ones.

Victor Hochhauser, impresario for most Russian cultural exchanges with Britain and a friend of the dancer, said her action was based on "an impulsive and sudden decision."

He hinted that there were romantic reasons for her decision to stay, but denied that Miss Makarova, who was recently married for the second time in Russia; had any serious boyfriend in Britain. He said, "It was an imbulse made in the company of

The rapidity of her decision was shown by her purchase of a car Russia, Mr. Hochhauser said. She had bought and paid for the car in cash at the Russian trade delegation, the day before she applied to stay in Britain.

Suit Seeks to Keep Children From Playing on the Grass

FRANKFURT, Sept. 6. (AP) .- Three mop haired children are challenging the sanctity of German grass by playing on it and their parents have been hailed into court for supporting such

When they told their children to go shead and play on the Konrad Loew went against cherished German tradition. It holds that grass exists only to delight the eye and only "keep off the grass" signs and wayward dogs can mar its pristine state.

It wasn't only that Sabine Loew, 12, and her brothers Johannes, 9, and Martin 6 were caught green-footed on the grass, but their parents refused to order the children off.

In what is now called a test case, the owners of the 1.100-apartment flousing project filed for an injunction to require the Loews to keep off the grass.

Mrs. Loew, her blue eyes flashing, said: "Something is very wrong in our society when they bring a lawsuit because kids were on the grass. Now we're going to fight and maybe people will have a little courage if they see somebody win a case."

The suit, due to be decided later this month, was filed by Neue Heimst, a firm owned by the West German Trade Union ssociation which has some 300,000 apartments in projects throughout West Germany.

Neue Helmat argued the grass is not a playground, does not belong to renters and serves only an aesthetic function "... and thereby bring toy to the beholder." It also contends children playing on the grass between rows of houses disturb other residents and that the six Loew children have been troublemakers since the family moved in in 1954. Only the three younger children are involved in the suit.

Mr. Loew, a 44-year-old economist and business consultant argues that Neue Heimat has shown a certain hostility toward children all along and there is no reason why children can't play on the grass since the project's playground is poorly situated and inadequate.

The Election in Vietnam May Have Helped Thieu

By Alvin Shuster

SAIGON (NYT).—All week long, Vietnamese strolling along the clogged streets of downtown Saigon have been looking up at a huge hillboard rising on a small patch of green. At infrequent intervals, some member of the official hureaucracy arrived to update the results of last Sunday's election for 30 senatorial seats, half the Scnate. The results, still unofficial, were rather surprising and gen-erated more interest than the campaign itself. For leading the list was the slate of ten candidates backed by the An Quang faction of Buddhists, the antigovernment activists who inspired the uprising in the north-ern provinces in 1986 to protest Salgon's policies, and boycotted previous campaigns.

The election of the Buddhist ticket, which ran a campaign demanding intensified steps to "win the peace," is not likely to shake the 60-man Senate or President Nguyen Van Thieu. The Senate is not all that important. It is more prestigious ties, but less significant in the legislative process. It is the lower house, for example, which originates all legislation.

forum to launch their antigovernment attacks. But the majority of the Senate, though it has given President Thieu a few problems on domestic issues. remains solidly behind him on war policy.

On the Senate floor, the newcomers will have a privileged

The hard bloc of opposition in the Senate will remain small -about 16 members. The two other victorious ten-man slates were Catholic—one staunchly pro-government, the other regarded as independent on domestic issues but behind President Thieu on the war, In all, 160 candidates on 16 slates contested the election, including five pro-government Catholic tickets, four Buddhist and a mixture in between. One slate composed entirely of military officers campaigning under the slogan "We support the Govern-ment" finished close to the bottom, even lower than the ticket headed by an eccentric monk.

Virtually every candidate talked of peace and needed economic measures, But the Buddhists, though restrained in their words, were the most dovish. Apart from their attacks on the government for corruption and inffectiveness, they talked frequently, if vaguely, about a compromise formula that would bring an end to the conflict:

"What we need is a disarm." ament of the mind," said Vin Ven Mau, the 56-year-old law professor who led the Buddhist ticket. Maybe a cease-fire proposal would help. We can't struggle. But any peace must be free of Communist coercion." While many here say the election reflected the massive unpopularity of the government, President Thieu still reaped benefits from the Buddhist victory. Some observers believe the presence of An Quang representatives may help contribute to political stability.

"We think it's a good sign," said a government official. "The militant Buddhists will he lu a position of some responsibility. Maybe they will work out their

Certainly one dividend for the Thieu government was that charges of fraud usually leveled in the days following elec-tions in Vietnam fell to a new low. One Vietnamese observer, who has lived through enough rigged elections, commented that is was "almost honest." Government officials, insisting it was totally fair, said the election marked progress toward representative government.

Honest Election

"We must say frankly that the election has proved that the majority of people are dis-satisled with the government," commented one pro-government pewspaper. "The election has also proved that an honest elec-tion can be held on this side, and thus pulled the rug from the Communist propaganda machine which used to label this regime as undemocratic."

Just what strategy the Buddhists will follow in their search for a peace formula remains to be seen. Clearly, they will not be able to force the Senate to take any peace stand apposed by President: Thieu. "We are just not sure what we will do yet," said one of the new Buddhist senators last week. But it is clear that when the showdown comes with the Communists at the polls it will he between Buddhists and the Communists rather than Thieu and the Communists."

President Thieu's main political concern at the moment is not any ultimate electoral test with the Communists but next year's presidential elections. The Buddhists are now talking confidently of the chances of Gen. Duong Van Minh, the hero of

Ky Image

The administration is reutely sensitive to these requirements on the left and on the right. But no one counted on having to face a combined Nguyen Cao Ky-Carl McIntire visitation.

Vice-President Ky has a public U.S. image as a total war "escalator"—which actually is a much overdrawn simplification of his position.

Mr. Ky's presence for President Eisenhower's funeral aroused little controversy, but a Ky visit under the auspices of Mr. McIntire could be a political nightmare.

Mr. McIntire has a sailed even administration cooservatives with charges that they are "soft on Communism" and have tried to "sabotage" his "anti-Marxist crusade." The State Department is one of his choicest targets.

Both in Saigon and in Washington, U.S. officials privately were stunned by the prospect. "Maybe we had better deny the vice-president a visa." one U.S. official said half-seriously in Saigon. That happens to be a political impossibility. "Maybe President Thleu can talk Ky out of it," ventured a Washington official in private. Perhaps Ky himself will realize this is just too embarrassing," suggested another. Is Science Reaching the Point Of a Diminishing Return?

One can perhaps date the artering of the Royal Society 1662 in London as the first at legitimizing act, with arles II as the Constantine science. Diminishing Rates

A very important question, thich never seems to be asked.

5: When will science come to an nd; that is, when will this exansion of knowledge which has een the result of the scientific ubculture begin to approach its -symptote?

One proposition about which I eel a good deal of confidence is bat no process of exponential rowth goes on for very long.

and that all growth processes eventually run into diminishing rates of growth, New processes, of course, may start off by the creation of new evolutionary potential, but this is fundamentally unpredictable. If we think of the growth of scientific knowledge as a single process, which in a sense it is, it is clear that this will follow the same kind of logistic curve that all the world's growth processes follow, shoply because it is expanding into a territory that is ultimate-

Logistic growth curves follow the principle that any, growth process involves either the realination of a limited potential as in the growth of the organism from the fertilized egg, or expansion into a limited environment, as in the expansion of the . population of a species.

The limited environment or "niche" of science is bounded by the limits of what might be called explicit knowledge in the human nervous system. We can, in fact, see the growth of knowledge as a frantic race against the depreciation of the stock of neurons. In the case of the individual who I understand, loses shout 100 000 neurons a day during his life, this takes the form. of increasingly elaborate arrangements of the diminishing stock.

As we get older, we have fewer marbles, but arrange them in prettier patterns. For the himan: race as a whole, we overcome the aging process by transmitting knowledge through education to the young. There are limits on both of these processes, and the larger the stock of knowledge the more we approach these limits.

Middle Range

It is quite easy to visualize a situation perhaps even in 100 years in which the stock of knowledge will be so large that the whole effort of the know-ledge industry will have to be devoted to transmitting it from one generation to the next. Education is an insatiable monster that will eventually gobble up all of research and at that moment the growth of science will come to an end.

This moment may be closer than we think. We are now in approximately the middle range of the logistic curve of growth of science, so that we have grown up experiencing, and therefore expecting, a reasonably constant rate of growth. The decline in the rate of growth when it comes may be quite ra-pid and will almost certainly be

The problem is complicated by the fact that science is not a single process but represents, as it were, a whole succession of growth curves, in which potential is exhausted in one field but renewed in another. Thus, in terms of sheer physical geogra-phy, the earth is now almost completely mapped, although even when I was a boy there were still white spaces on the globe.

Here we see knowledge expanding into a limited field which it has now virtually occupied; no great increase in knowledge can now be expected. On the other hand, in other areas like meteorology, the physiology and structure of the nerrous system and the social vous system and the social aciences, we still have a long way

Perhaps the biggest unknown at the moment is the future of biology; especially molecular biology and the possibilities that this opens up for genetic surgery. Perhaps the biggest threat to the human race at the mo-ment is not so much the nuclear weapon as the possibility of eliminating the aging process.

To Die at 1,000

If we could rearrange the homan genetic structure to program death at the age of 1,000 rather than at 70 (this no doubt would be called Project Methuselah), the human race would face the biggest crisis of its existence, a crisis which I ilhistrate easily to an academic andlence by asking them who wants to be an assistant professor for 500 years.

The one thing we know about a developed society is that it has to inhabit a "Spaceship Earth."
It is well recognized that our existing technology is fundamentally suicidal, resting as it does on a linear process which begins with the extraction of exhaustible resources in the shape of ores and fossil fuels and ends in pollution. The great unsolved problem of technology is that of creating what is being called a "looped" economy, in which man finds a comfortable life in the middle of the process which is essentially circular, that is, in which the waste products of human activity are all used as raw materials for the next cycle of production.

We are still a very long way from this kind of technology, although there are the beginnings of it in, for instance, the Haber process for the fixation of nitrogen from the air (1913) and the Dow process for the extraction of magnesium from the sea. Ultimately, it is clear that we will have to use the atmosphere, the oceans and the soil as inexhaustible material resources in the sense that what we take from them we will also put back into them. Because of the second law of thermodynamics, a system of this kind will have to have energy inputs, and we may be forced finally to fall back on energy inputs from the sun. We can, of course, postpone this day by burning up the planet itself, even in the elegant form of turning hydrogen into helium, but I suspect that this also is an exhaustible resource It is by no means too early to begin a fairly massive assault on this problem, even though the linear economy has a number of centuries to run. What I am discussing here is the "entrophy trap," which has psychological aspects per-haps even more difficult than the physical aspects. There is a kind of second law of cultural dynamics 'which states simply that when anything has been done, it cannot be done again. In other words, we start off any system with a potential for novelty which is gradually exhausted. We see this in every field of human life, in the arts as well as the sciences. Once Beethoven has written the Ninth Symphony, mobody else can do it. Consequently, we find that in any evolutionary process, even in the arts, the search for novelty becomes cor-

Entropy Trap

The "entropy trap" is perhaps the most subtle and the most fundamental of the obstacles toward realizing the developed society, although the other traps which I have mentioned, particularly the population trap and the war trap, seem of course However, we do not really know even, in orders at magnitude what would be the optimum population of a Spaceship Barth. Up to now, at any rate, we have no social machinery for human population at high levels of living. What I call my"green stamp" plan of population control, in which everyone at adolescence receives 110 green stamps, 100 of which entitles the possessor to one legal child and in which a green stamp market provides a great deal of variety of individual choice, has not been taken seriously by anybody. Yet it certainly seems preferable to any supposed substitute.

The awful truth is that we know so little about the dynamics of population that we do not even know whether this is a problem that will untimately

The war trap is the most threatening et the moment although it may turn out to be the easiest to escape. The intemational system threatens us partly because it is based on deterrence, which, as can easily he demonstrated, cannot be ultimately stable, simply because if it were stable it would cease to deter. There must therefore be a positive prohability of nuclear war, and the longer this probability remains in the system, the greater the total probability hecomes of Whether a nuclear war would be an irretrievable disaster we do not know, but the probability of its being irretrievable is uncomfortably high when we consider the possible long-run ecological consequences. Of even more immediate significance is the burden of what . I. have called the "world war industry," that is, the resources which are devoted to producing whatever is purchased by military budgets. This now amounts to about $200 billion a year, which is a burden on the human race that could well make the difference between achieving the transition into developed society and not achieving it.

A very important question in all these scenarios for the fu-ture is that of the mutual interaction between the scientific subculture and other subculpolitical and the folk cultures. There is a certain tendency within the scientific community to assume that all that is necary is an expansion of the scientific subculture into more and more areas of life. This view is at best a gross oversimplification and at worst a dangerous illusion.

Incomplete Culture

In the first place, the scien-tific subculture, and the tech-nological "superculture" which it has produced, is not and probably cannot be a complete culture. It is true that there is a world superculture of, say, chemistry, practiced with much the same symbols and ideas by chemists everywhere. No matter what the ideology of the surrounding society, chemists will all have the same mandels. in the shape of the Periodic Table on the walls of their classroom and will be proclaim-

As soon as the chemist steps tory, however, he becomes an Catholic or a Protestant, a Maoist or a Hindu, an Afrikaner or a Kikuyu. He is rarely a chemist for more than eight to ten hours a day. The rest of the time he is immersed in his domestic and local culture, of which he may be a slightly aberrant member but from which he will probably not diverge too sharply.

We may doubt whether the scientific subculture has penetrated any society as deeply as Christianity penetrated medie-val Europe or as Islam penetrated the culture which it created though this admittedly would be hard to prove. It seems true, however, that those countries which have been most successful in accepting the scientific superculture, and in generating the kind of economic evelopment which is based oo it, are also societies which have had a strong and vigorous folk ed States and Japan,

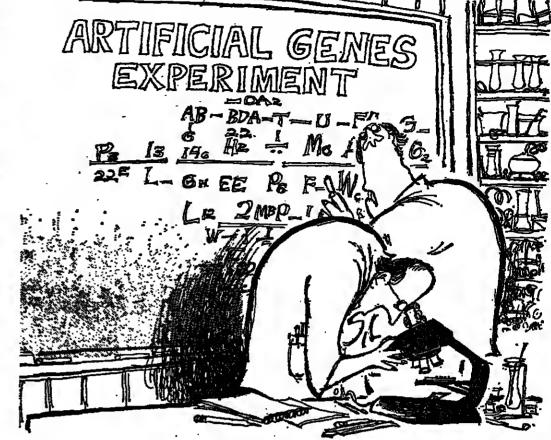

Where the folk culture produces an ethic which is ill-adapted to the modern world, as it seems to be in the Arab states, the very impact of that superculture disorganizes a society rather than moving it toward development. What we have to think of, therefore, is much more of a symbiosis between the scientific subculture and the other subcultures with which it is surrounded and with which it interacts, rather than any sort of conquest of the other cultures by a kind of universal church or culture of

The scientific subculture and related technology have produced an enormous impact on all other subcultures whether it is the family, the church or the state, the military or the arts, or the youth, the middle aged or the aged-simply because human values have a very slim genetic base and are mostly learned.

Economic Impact

The most obvious impact is the sheer economie one. Science is supported mainly by the grants economy, and the grants mainly come from nonscientific subcultures like the military or the political. These economic relations unquestionably divert the dynamic process of the growth of science in the direction of the tunes that the pipers are willing to resources. Certainly in terms of the priorities of human survival, the resources which are devoted to the military and the space enterprise would seem to be grotesquely large by comparison with resources devoted to such things as peace research and ecological survival.

These interactions between science and its economic base may thus produce severe mis-

Perhaps the next generation will change all this. One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the extraordinary mobilization of youth in ques-tioning the established values of virtually all subcultures of all societies. While this questioning can degenerate into nihilism or a retreat into superstition, it can also force us into painful reappraisals of many of the things that we have hitherto taken for grant-

It questions the subservience of the scientific community either to the state or to commercial interests. It insists that the only ultimate product of technology that makes any sense is the good person and the good life, however this may interpreted. It questions anything that seems exploitative on cruel. It remindedness in human relations. which is certainly not incontitude toward the truth.

Grave Dangers

We recognize grave dangers in this movement. It could lead to monstrous perversions, as the youth movement in Germany was perverted by Hitler. If the scientific community, however, is sensitive to the fact that it is not the only subculture on the beach, and that it must maintain subtle inputs and outputs and even bargaining relationships with the other subcultures around it, there is a good chance that this increased awareness of the world may enable us to avoid the traps with which the whole developmental process is increasingly beset.

The scientific revolution and science-based technology represent a kind of takeoff from the old world of classical civilization. The "flight" of development cannot go on forever. At some point there must be a re-entry into Spaceship

Earth, This re-entry will present acute difficulties.

If, however, we have a clear view of the nature of the problem, a certain optimism about our power to solve it is entirely reasonable. The one great cause for optimism indeed the clear fact that the evolutionary potential of the human nervous system is very far from having been exhausted and that there is no nonexistence theorem at present about con-tinued human learning.

Human learning is the key to all our social problems, whether of population, war or entropy. The possibility that we might find out something about human learning which would enable us to accelerate it is an even greater reason for long-run optimism. If short-run disasters are not ir-retrievable, they will be holiday. It arose as an answer to May Day. as a dramatization of the fact, now fully confirmed, that labor in America-meaning the work force, rather than its toil-was a competitive element in a competitive economy, rather than a revolutionary force in a relatively closed society. Yet it is rather curious that America, the great bastion of the work ethic, should celebrate the worker. not his task.

In the mythos of the American way, work has always been an obligation, virtually a religious duty. It is no accident that American sociologists have been among the strongest supporters of Max Weber's contention that the glorification of work, its almost sacramental character, derived from Calvin; that a popular literature of upward mobility through hard application, temperance and frugality became a kind of American "institution."

Today, the young tend to reject this ethic. They don't think it is socially necessary; they believe it has been used to exploit the worker; they find its religious premises dubious and its practical effects unhappy. But in the process they are in danger of losing the very real joy, not necessarily of work, but certainly of competence in work. This rejection stems in part from the fallacy of redncing work to a ritualistic activity, a kind of penance resulting from Adam's trespass. Then there is the undoubted fact that the increasing complexity of the modern economy has made so many jobs remote, in appearances, at least, from the reality of feeding, clothing and housing

Labor Day is a uniquely North American 200 million people. Craftsmanship, in the old sense of hand-working the necessities of life, has become a luxury item, or a per-

> Americans, from Eli Whitney to IBM, have emphasized tool-making rather than toolusing. Beginning with a chronic shortage of human labor (in proportion to the resources available) the American experience has tended toward the machine, mass production, the labor-saving device. That this has divorced the worker increasingly from the end product is common knowledge; that it has also given the American a broader competence in machinery than any other country has not always been recognized. Mark Twain's Connecticut Yankee may have been an anachronism in King Arthur's court. but he still flourishes in American cities and snhurbs; he is still the hero of the "do-ityourself" cult. That cult may be a subject for mirth, but it is also quite real in the United States

> And it could be a saving grace in a day of rapid change, when technology itself is under fire. For there is a joy in competently controlling a complex piece of machinery; there is, in fact, a joy in doing any job well. Leisure has great rewardsby contrast, work can not only buy leisure. and enrich it, but it can, as the old German phrase has it, make life sweet. And this truth, underlying all the myths, the liturgical significances, the bland hypocrisies, should be rediscovered by modern youth. The Labor Day may have a meaning beyond the current contract talks at General Motors. or the drive for a four-day week, or even the yearning for work that is "relevant"

Is This Trip Necessary?

At the Reverend Carl McIntire's last big pro-war demonstration in Washington, Georgia's Gov. Lester Maddox was a featured speaker. There were calls to victory ("in six to eight weeks"), diatribes against sex education, and no end of suggestions that the Nixon administration was in the way of selling us out in Vietnam. And just as the peace demonstrators have their more offensive, uninvited tagalongs, so-who else? -the National Socialist White People's party put in an appearance, marching alongside the paraders with a sign that read "Nixon Is a No-Win Swine." In view of all this, it was hard to imagine what Rev. McIntire could do for an encore, what attraction he might provide for his coming October 3 march that wouldn't prove anticlimactic. Well now we know, and you've got to hand it to Rev. McIntire: Thursday it was announced that Vietnamese Vice-President Nguyen Cao Ky planned to turn up as guest speaker.

So far as we can perceive, the Nixon administration does not appear entirely thrilled by this development. And we should not be too surprised if, between now and D-Day, Vice-President Ky's itinerary or his mission (or both) are somehow revised. That is, Rev. McIntire, who previously charged the administration with attempting to "sabotage" his April rally, may come to look back on that episode as a mere fiddling with the locks that preceded the theft of the war plans. For Mr. Nixon has ample reason to discourage this bizarre appearance. and not just on grounds that Rev. McIntire plus Vice-President Ky plus whoever comes to counter-demonstrate is a combination more than a little likely to end up in another tear-gas bath. After all, it was the President who stressed the point that foreign policy is not made in the streets, and it is hard to see how his argument can be much helped by the presence of Vice-President Ky at Rev. McIntire's rally. It is also hard to see how Vice-President Ky's presence among this particular group could do much to fortify the faith of the wavering middle in the wisdom of our commitment to the government of South Vietnam. You could argue, of course, that one good turn deserves another, that what we are really witnessing is nothing more than the second step in a cultural exchange of vice-presidents. But think what you will of Mr. Agnew's recent foray abroad, nothing he did or said seems to us to have left this country deserving of budget ever since. such a visit for such a purpose. This, in other words, doesn't strike us as reciprocation at all, but more as a form of massive retaliation.

Marxist Victory in Chile

There is no point in trying to minimize the importance of what has happened in Chile. In a free election with an unusually high turnout the candidate whose campaign was organized by the Communists has won the most votes. He has done so without softpedaling the Marxist revolutionary program he hopes to carry out.

The result, unprecedented in the Americas and virtually without parallel anywhere, is a heavy blow at liberal democracy. It may mark the demise of the ailing Alliance for Progress, which was undertaken "to improve and strengthen democratic institutions."

Under Chile's Constitution, Sen. Salvador Allende could still be denied the presidency when the Congress meets Oct. 24 to choose between the two top finishers, for he failed to poll the absolute majority of the popular vote required for direct election. In present circumstances, that seems improbable. The Congress has set a precedent for electing the front-runner, and former President Jorge Alessandri, the runner-up, has said he would not accept election unless he got the largest number of popular votes.

Why did Dr. Allende finally finish first in his fourth bid for the presidency? President Eduardo Frei's "revolution in liberty" has achieved solid results over six years but it could not satisfy the expectations it had aroused. Still, the polls indicated that it looks, in constant billions of Dr. Frei would have won an absolute majority as in 1964, had he been eligible to run for re-election.

The architect of disaster for Dr. Frei's Christian Democrats was Radomiro Tomic. who tried at times to outflank Dr. Allende on the left and who seemed to be running against his own party's record in office. Dr. Tomic finished a bad third, an astonishing result for the candidate of a party that still has nearly twice the strength of any other single party in the Congress.

All the United States can do in this situation is to keep hands off, behave correctly and hope for the best. Dr. Allende is a Chilean, preferred by a plurality—though not a majority-of Chilean voters. The Monroe Doctrine has no relevance here and neither does the Inter-American Defense Treaty. Whatever troubles Chile may face would only be compounded by even the appearance of American interference.

WASHINGTON.-The summer is over and the first major political test of the Nixon administration is coming up in the congressional election. This should bring the country back to the gigantic ordeals and menaces of the war, crime, inflation and unemployment.

At the beginning of the year, the administration was convinced that Vietnam was the presiding issue of the November voting, but it has come up to Labor Day with unemployment at 5.1 percent of the labor force, highest since the au-

The Dilemma

This illustrates the President's dilemma. To deal with the war issue, he cut back on defense spending more than is generally realized. but in the process, he ran into the economic and unemployment issue, which has been the nightmare of the Republican party ever since

Mel Laird, the Secretary of Defense, is a good symbol of this diletuma. He came into the cabinet and the Pentagon with the reputation as a hawk on the Vietnam war and as one of the shrewdest politicians in the Roublican party, and be has been cutting the defense

He was faced with a practical money problem. For example, the cost of maintaining 2,700,000 men in the armed forces in 1965 was $14.1 hillion. Since then the cost has more than doubled to $29.3 billion, so being a practical man and a politician facing the rising ion to the war, he cut back.

In fact, for the last few months he has been carrying around a pocketful of little plastic cards, which he has been handing out to his old friends on Capitol Hill and the press to show the Nixon ad-ministration's trend away from defense spending. Here is the way dollars at fiscal 1971 prices:

1964	Peak V.H. War 1968	1971	Change '68-'71
Defense Bodses $ 66.8 Other Federal			—$17.3

Gross National			•
Per cent Defer	se Budge	7.0%	.P., —2.7%
Per cent Defen	43.2%	34.6%	¹ ,—8.6%

On the other side of Mr. Laird's card it shows military personnel dropping from 3,450,000 in June. 1969, to 3,083,000 in May, 1970, and down to 2908,000 planned for June. 1971. In short, the total military and civilian personnel decrease is 838,000 at the present time and will increase to 1,641,000 by June

These Pentagon cutbacks have not satisfied those who want the war ended now or want a datecertain put on total U.S. withdrawal from Southeast Asia. But in political terms it has blunted the antiwar movement and won the support of George Meany, head of the AFL-CIO, and the hardhats on the war issue. In fact, Mr. Meany gave a Labor Day interview in which he announced that the Democratic party was a "sha...bles," and he should know, since he has contributed so much to its

But some fundamentals are obvious and when viewed as a backdrop to the instant issues in the Middle East they explain a Number one is the fact that the United States, basically a "have." or status quo, power, is contracting its position abroad, willingly or unwillingly, in the Middle East and everywhere else. The Mixon Doctrine is a conceptual framework for this, an effort to reposition the U.S. in a way that avoids what President Nixon fears more, a return to a mindless isolationism on the part of the American public.

Expansionism

But power, today as always, abbors a vacuum. And the other great world power is the Soviet Union, moving toward the status of a "have" power in many ways but nonetheless basically expan-sionist, not status quo minded. It seeks to have its influence flow into vacuums left by the United States but to do so in a way that does not risk its "have" status and aspirations.

Byer since the United States America, desperate for peace in began to deal with the Soviet order to avoid a new commitment on a period of declining commitof a "settlement" of problems, the typical riewpoint of a status quo minded people. There have been exceptions—talk of a "rollback" of Communism by the Republicans in the late 1950s, for example, but when push came to shove, the exceptions turned out to be verbal, not substantive.

In the subsequent 15 years th pattern has been evident. There are fragmentary exceptions, of course but the central fact is evident The 1967 six-day war now only a temporary aberration from the Moscow-Cairo viewpoint.

Most recently, Moscow agreed, and won Nasser's approval, to the American-sponsored cease-fire because it wants no war with the United States and because it feels that any peace that might ensue would be so favorable to its Arab clients that Soviet influence would continue to increase in the Middle

New Look at the Police

By William V. Shannon

WASHINGTON (NYT).-Of all the nation's institutions, probably none has been under more pressure in recent years than the The police have had to cope with three developments for which their old-fashioned ways did not prepare them. There are the antiwar demonstrations in which political emotions focus on the police because they are much more accessible than the demonstrators' real target—the

There is the upsurge in the num-ber of young people and the "youth revolution" featuring new behavior with regard to dress, sex, and drugs. There is the arrival in the North and West of millions of Southern Negroes. These newcomers change neighborhoods, bring new values and new problems, and add a racial component to the work of predominantly white police forces.

Any one of these developments would be enough to put a police department on its mettle. All three occurring at once have brought police work to a near crisis. Everywhere there are demands for more police and for tougher police meas. Health Service, prostitutes are not ures. Yet individual policemen are arrested if they stay off the streets, increasingly frustrated and complain bitterly that the public does not back them up.

It is becoming harder to recruit men and women for the police. There is some ominous evidence that police work is acquiring a reputation as a job to be avoided. Sons used to be proud to follow their fathers on "the force." But a New York City study showed that in 1969 only 2 percent of the recruits had policemen as fathers compared with 10 percent in 1961. Fortunately, some sophisticated attention is now being given to the problems of the police. The monumental report of the National Crime Commission appointed by President Johnson was an important beginning. Congress in 1968

The Police Foundation hopes to his best show that he spands most of police work, at what it is we expect our police to do, and how recruitment, training, and methods can be improved to make the police what they ideally ought to be not combetants in political and racial power plays, but the universally respected, impartial defenders of justice and of democratic values.

This ideal is not unattainable. A recent public opinion poll in Britain, for example, showed that 95 percent of the people respect their police and believe them to be courteous, honest, and doing a good job. The British police, of course, have their problems too, parti-cularly in race relations, but there is a happier relationship between police and society.

Different in Britain A major reason is that British police are not burdened with en-forcing laws that are unenforceable. Gambling is legal, homosexual relations between consenting adults in private is legal, abortions can be obtained free on the National Health Service, prostitutes are not and narcotics addicts are treated relatively leniently.

By contrast, in the United States we have translated everybody's private moral standards into law from the Methodists on liquor to the Catholics on abortion. We have wound up with police forces where "vice squad" is a synonym for payoff and potentially good policemen are demoralized by protection money flowing from illegal but enormously profitable gambling of all kinds, No real improvement in police performance is possible until Americans face up to this corruption and the double standard which produces it.

Another obstacle to improved police work is that the police and the public both have a misconcepestablished the Law Enforcment tion of what it is police mostly Assistance Administration. Now a do. This analysis leaves out those police assigned full time to traffic control, working with youth gangs, and other special assignment

By Thomas E. Mulianey NEW YORK, Sept. 6 (NYT). Summer ended last week as far as the world of business is concerned, and now the crucial testing period for the nation's sconomy is at hand. The advent of Labor Day, the traditional turning point of each year, finds many busine men, government officials and private economists considerably more optimistic than they were just a few months ago, but they recognize that a large number of question marks still exist, over the likely course of the economy, the unemployment trend, the status of inflation and the international situation. There was some deflation of rising hopes last week in vari-ous economic statistics and business developments, although

douse the widspread optimism that began to take form during the last month. Among the somewhat less cheerful developments were: the threat of an automobile strike against General Motors and Chrysler at mid-month following mion rejection of the in-dustry's initial 6 percent-s-yesr wage offer; the moderate reduction in the capital spending plans of American business; the percent decline in auto sales during the final 10 days of August and the recent rather lackluster trend in general retail sales and construction ac-

August over industrial produc-tion, prices, new orders, mone-tary ease, housing, the auto negotiations, the stock market's buoyant behavior and the Middle East cease-fire will have to be validated. The good news might have been over-promising. Nevertheless, evidence is accumulating that the worst of the economic slump and infla-tion is over. But economists and financial observers have been cautioning that it would be a mistake to be overly optimistic. In many areas there is still an environment of uncer-marks that hold the key to the general business trend in the final months of 1970 are these: 1. Will the American consumer, flushed with some $10 billion of additional buying power, become more exuberant in his spending and reduce his un-usually high 7 1/2 percent sav-ings rate? 2. Will the monetary authorities continue to pursue this year's significantly easier money policy that will ultimate-

Affirmative answers to any or all of those pivotal questions, of course, would have a profound effect on the course of the economy and the financial markets as the year draws to a close. At the moment, the develop-ment that seems most likely is a cut in the prime rate from the 8 percent level sometime after mid-September.

The markets mirrored considerable caution early last week in typically subdued pre-holiday trading, but stock and bond prices held the ground gained during August rather well. Optimism over the economic outlook, inflation and easier credit still reigns strong in Wall

The Dow index has had a strong advance-some 64 points in its latest upswing since the eppearance of encouraging economic statistics in the middle of August. And it has staged a recovery of more than 22 percent since reaching the year's low in the vicinity of 631 at the end of May.

NEW YORK ONYTI-There must have been times last week when Leonard Woodcock wondered whether the international executive board of the United Auto Workers did him

a favor by naming him to head the union after Walter P. Reuther died in a plane crash four

Here he was working up to a Sept. 14 deadline in the first crucial test of his leadership—the negotiation of new wage agreements with the Big Three auto manufacturers and not much on the table to encourage hope that he could bring home a fat contract without a strike.

Mr. Woodcock has no eagerness to start his big-league record with a strike, but he is even less eager to recommend a settlement, then have it turned down by representatives of the rank and file. That never has happened to a proposed national agreement in the 35-year his-tory of the auto union, even though it has been happening with increasing frequency in other unions.

· Federal mediators report that rebellious members are upsetting one settlement in every eight endorsed by their union leaders. Militancy runs high in many UAW locals, but it usually finds expression in revolts over plant grisvances rather than national issues.

One of the Reuther qualities held in highest esteem by the auto companies was the persussiveness and persistence he applied to winning ratification of the Big Three pacts he nego-tisted. Mr. Woodcock, a man cast in the Reuther mold, is determined to keep that part of his mentor's tradition intact.

Showdown Near

the showdown just eight days off is whether the new UAW

chief will have enything he considers good enough to recommend. Here are some of the elements he will be juggling in deciding whether to

The "you owe us" argument:

The union reluctantly agreed three years ago to surrender the automatic cost-of-living escalator it had had since 1948. Instead of getting more money whenever consumer

prices rose, the auto workers accepted a 16-cent celling on the adjustments in hourly pay the companies would have to make over the life of the agreement. The difference between what they did get and what they would have gotten under the old formula now stands at 26 cents an hour. The union insists its members are entitled pendent of new money for 1970

and beyond. The companies do

Unescelled Inc.'s final terms for the tender offer for its $10 million of 7 percent Eurobonds are still not set. The problem seems to be to sweeten the deal, apparently through equity. Bondholders are apparently balking at the logic of being told Unexcelled cannot pay the $85 in interest per $1,000 bond due Sept. 1, then told they can get $100 in cash if they just return the bond, and perhaps another $50 per bond in about six months if all goes well. The company has said it is in a liquidity crisis, which raised the question of where and whythey were going to raise the extra $65 immediate payout per bond, instead of merely paying the conpon.

It is still the general consensus in the investment banking community that interest rates fundamentally are headed lower and that last week's contrary course represented merely a pause to absorb a bulge in inventories of unsold issues. Moreover, the Federal Reserve wasn't very active in the money market to push rates lower there.

A factor that should have helped the bond market and caused a further easing in rates -but didn't was the government's report at midwaek that corporations had again revised downward their estimates of capital spending for 1970.

By virtue of its strong upturn in the final two sessions, the stock market ended moderately higher last week in a broad-based advance. The volume of trading picked up as A total of 1,155 stocks ended in the plus column for the week, while 465 declined and 146 were unchanged. There were 65 new highs and 16 new lows for the year, . Almost half of the week's 60.3 million-share volume on the New York Stock Exchange came in the last two sessions. Turnover the week before amounted to 78.5 million shares. All of the leading market averages rose for the week, though much more modestly than in the preceding two weeks.

The Dow-Jones industrial stock average posted a net gain of 5.34, closing at 771.15, a.new recovery high. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 0.97 to 83.83 and the Big Board's composite index was up 0.63 to Occidental rose 3 3/4 to 20 5/8, fueled by H spectacular advance on Friday. The comissue of posted prices with the Libyan government and that its crude oil production from the concession in Libya has been restored as of Wednesday. Volume totaled 983,100 shares.

Natomas spurted 18 1/2 points to 58 3/8 on turnover of 912,300 shares. In the previous week it had gained 8. 1/8 points. On Tuesday, the company announced an oil-well discovery offshore of Sumatra. Its tremendous gain was abetted greatly by short covering on the part of traders.

Telex rose 2 points to 14 as 718,200 shares changed hands. It benefited from the general recovery in glamour issues.

Federal National - Mortsage Association, better known as "Fanny May," bowed onto the New York Stock Exchange Monday. It closed at 51 3/8, after trading as high as 52.

The union wants the cap taken off the escalator so that all future increases in living costs will be matched by automatic wage increases. The companies want the limit kept at 8 centsor 2 percent of the present $4 hourly average wage-in the second and third year of the new pact. Obviously, there would be no great heat in this issue if either side took seriously the Nixon administration's assurances that it is getting inflation under control. The union, embarrassed by the big bite higher prices took out of its members' pay envelopes last time around, has made such a major talking point of full protection now that it may have trouble retreating on this issue.

How much new money: The companies opened up with an offer of 7 1/2 percent more in wages the first year and 3 per-cent more in each of the next two. That meant 30 cents at the start for the Everage UAW member, plus 12 cents extra in 1971 and again in 1972. But the union insisted that only 4 cents of the first installment could be considered tew money and dismissed the whole pack-age as a "hiccup." Wage set-tlements in construction and other industries have been running at an annual rate of bet-ter than 15 percent, but the pattern in manufacturing is under The 1971 world team champlouship for the Bermuda Bowl will be played in Taiwan, and for the first time there will be two teams representing North America.

One will be the Dallas Aces. The other will be determined by a playoff in New York this month involving the four teams with the best records in major national team championships during the past year. The youngest contenders are the winners of the Spingold Cup, a team led by Altman of New York. Altman and team member Peter Weichsel are 27 years old; Joel Stuart and Tom Smith are in their early 30s, and David Strasberg is the old man of the team at 42. The diagramed deal contributed to their victory in that event.

Weichsel as North opened one club, a strong bid showing at least 16 high-card points. East made an overcall of one spade, South bid one notrump, then went to game after North's raise showed a balanced hand. South knew he had useful intermediate cards; in particular, the spade ten was probably worth a trick once East had overcalled in that suit. The spade nine was led,

South ducked in dummy and captured the jack with the ace. He led the diamond ten, West took his ace and led his remaining spade to knock out dummy's king.

IF you've had enough of parties and sand and mountains, of people and dogs and demonstrations... if you'd like to forget about traffic and packing and the end of summer, find yourself a hammock or an aimchair and read "God Is an Englishman," the fifth and newest of R. F. Delder-field's odd but charming epic historical novels. It's a book to get lost in on a long weekend. It creates a world utterly removed from the present. It's cheerful without being pollyannish, sentimental without laying it on too thick, and sufficiently moving to dampen one's eyes without blurring the print on the page. It's long and elaborate, because Delderfield is never shy about writing a scene, not even when he has revealed its outcome in advance, yet almost every scene is written imaginatively enough to justify its presence. In sum, "God Is an Englishman" is unabashed fiction, so cheerfully unconcerned with the recent history of the novel—so selfindulgently old-fashioned-that it seems almost an innovation. a two-day lollipop resting proudly in a gallery of abstract

The people of the book seem to have stepped from a waxworks museum featuring characters of the 19th-century English novel. In addition to hero, heroine, and other woman, there are Aged Parent, Scheming Housekeeper, Diligent Urchins, Rakish Gambler, Upright Bookkeeper, Godly Foreman, Scottish Sharper, and even Charles Dickens himself (Delderfield's hero, clearly), glimpsed against the background of an actual historical event that Dickens was actually in-volved in (the Staplehurst railway disaster of 1866) and which serves as "the" novel's major crists.

But Delderfield knows very well what he is dealing with And like an indulgent sincle sitting down-to-tell a heddine he seems to know we know he knows. Tell us about England. Delderfield. Tell us about Adam. Swann, how he found the necklace of rubles while serving with

Rindt Killed in Crash at Monza Trials

MONZA, Italy, Sept. 6 (AP). Jochen Rindt, one race away from winning the world drivers championship, was killed yes-terday when his Lotus Ford crashed during a trial run for the Italian Grand Prix. The 28-year-old Austrian, leader in this year's Formula-One championship table by 20 peints, was fatally injored in the wreckage of his racer after the vehicle struck the guard rail on a curve, lost a wheel, in and bounced several times. Part slightly injured a policeman.

Rindt, a veteran of ten years ef racing, was taken to the infirmary on the track. Doctors there pronounced him dead but called an ambulance to take him to Milan University Hospital's re-examination center. Doctors said he suffered a broken traches, crushed thorax and broken left leg. His wife, Nina, was one of the first to arrive at the infirmary. Doctors at the track said they momentarily succeeded in getting Rindt's heart to beat again, and for this reason sent him to the Milan hospital. Another member of the official Lotus team, Emerson Fittipaldi of Brazil escaped injury yesterday when his car went eff the parabolic curve and crashed into woods, not far from the scene of Rindt's smash. Fittipeldi's car was bedly demaged. After Rindt's.

Oh, No, Dad!

By Russell Baker

LONDON.—The middle-aged gentlemen of the 'power structure" to whom "the war" means World War II and who cannot abide the modern draftdodger have perhaps failed to grasp that war has lost its most exciting attraction since 1945. This was not the opportunity, which war afforded, to become a hero or to dazzle the girls with 8 smart uniform, and it certainly

Baker wasn't the opportunity to do something noble for the state. Many men who went to war between 1941 and 1945 may have been briefly moved by any or all of these motives, but what was truly exciting and even alluring about the prospect of military service was something far more pleasurable. It was the chance to travel.

This, of course, is precisely what military service today fails to offer. Quite the opposite. A young man entering service in World War II was more often than not escaping from a conatricted life in a small and nbscure community into a great, exciting world.

There, still at the edge of the Depression, the world of the urban young was largely confined to the corner drugstore, perhaps a streetcar ride to the high school, a Saturday night dance at the gym, a trip downtown to the movies. Summer vacation for the lucky might mean a visit to a relative in the country or two weeks at a conveniently close seashore.

A train journey of 200 miles once or twice a year distinguished a young man as a traveler of high sophistication. Nobody knew anyone who had ever been aboard a ship, flown in an airplane, or taken a car to California.

World War II opened escape hatches onto the world. Train trips of a thousand miles were suddenly possible, and many crossed the entire continent by rall. Mississippi and Georgia and Arizona and Texas were out there somewhere beckoning.

Ιſ you were overseas, of course, there was the possibility of being shot, but there was also the prospect of being overseas—places like Londoo, Paris, Rome, if you were lucky, the islands if you were not—bot still somepiace, someplace more alien than the drugstore corner.

Nowadays, of course, we all know that the world they saw in those years was not much of a place. It is still, however, the only world the military offers the young in return for an option on their lives. What is it, in fact? A town in North Carolina. Idle nights on the street corners of San Diego. Saturday evenings in Biloxi. A barracks near Saigon. . . .

How must this prospect strike a young man who has grown up as a citizen of the world? Reduced air fares have made it possible for him to know San Francisco, Boston, Denver and Atlanta as his father knew the territory between the drugstore corner and the gym where the dance was held. Wheeled at sixteen in most states, he has had the freedom of the great cities, as well as the continent.

He has been to, or knows he can easily go to, Mexico, the isles of Greece, Stockholm, Paris, Majorca, Tel Aviv, Nepal . . . Not surprisingly, the military's offer seems dreary. A weekend pass in Denver may have looked like a major event in the life of his father. The son, by contrast, is more apt to say, "You offer me Saturday nights in Biloxi, after I've had weeks in Copenhagen and expect me not to miss the chicks of Rome; it's a sell." By comparison with the freedom he has known, the life offered by the military must look very much like a prison sentence. For his father, World War II expanded the horizon. For him, Vietnam

U.S. Census: The Suburb Is Where The Action Is Today

By Jack Rosenthal

WASHINGTON (NYT). - In that quieter time not so many months ago, when young rebels confronted the system with taunts rather han demonstrations, a group boarded a sightseeing bus for an unusual tour. Out. out they went until they reached their goal-the suburbs. With mock incredulity. they marveled at the alien quietude, snapped tourist photos of men mowing lawns, and then hurrled home to the city where, they said, the action was. However right they were were wrong about the action, as was documented last week with the release of the first national returns from the 1970 census. Like a photograph still being developed, the massive statistical picture is blurred. But the main outline is bold enough -so bold in fact that it provokes comment from the normally imperturbable profes-

In the largest sociological, economic and political sense the suburbs are where the action is. Pass City Total

• Of the 25 largest cities, 13 lost population since 1960. Taken together the 25 citles gained a mere 710,000. The 25 largest metropolitan areas, by contrast, gained 8.9 million-12 times

Nor has the suburban revolution reached its peak. Census director George Hay Brown expects the trend to continue, even intensify, in the next de-cade. The ontward signs—the sleek factories, the beltways, the endless shopping centers-have long since become a familiar part of the suburban scene.

Far less familiar are the deeper social concerns underlying the profound change in bow Americans live. Not even the word "city" has much meaning any more except to describe the arbitrary political lines around part of a coherent block of people. Experts thrash about for new concepts like "SMSA"

Labels Change

The deterioration of familiar labels like "city" is paralleled by a deeper, less obvious deterioration of familiar social concepts. One example concerns transportstion. A common American image is that of the radial city, in which residents go downtown to work in the morning and back out at night. Yet economists already calculate that two-thirds of all new jobs are in the suburbs-and a rising number of old ones as well. If many of those who now live in the suburbs also work in the suburbs, how would they benefit from the schemes for mass transit to take people downtown? The potential vehicle for response to such concerns lies in Washington dispatched mounted deputy marshals around the infant country to count heads for the original census in 1790, it was the first time any nation had used population as the basis for reapportioning its legisla-

Though the 1970 census count is not final, experts already foresee a substantial reshuffling of the U.S. Congress, let alone the state legislatures. These are political forums in which the perceptions and problems of suburbia will receiva ever increasing attention. For example, California probably will gain five House seats and surge past New York, likely to lose two seats. The Los Angeles metropolitan region alone gained almost 2 million people in the decade.

Even with responsive legislators, a whole array of social concerns lies ahead. How energetic will suburbanites—and their representatives, be on behalf of the people left behind in the cities, the black, the elderly, the poor? To questions like this not even the census the census itself. When George; can provide the answers.
